

What's this?

“Lights Off” was the final project for my music engineering class at the Clive Davis Institute (NYU). I co-wrote and co-produced this song with Jasper Richards to create a full-length song in the recording studio. We utilized close to 15 multitracks and spent 15 hours in the studio. Being our first-ever full-length studio project, this was one of the most difficult and rewarding experiences of my musical/educational career; we went from having no studio experience to creating a decent song in just one semester. I wanted to share this project because I feel it is a testament to the effort that goes in to forming and releasing a high-quality song. Although every project I release may not be perfect, it is always created with passion and thought. I want my followers to experience my journey at the Clive Davis Institute as an important factor in their relationship with my music, because its role in the growth of my career is undeniable. I thank you guys for always supporting me, and for allowing projects like these to get the recognition they deserve.
